

Call for Papers (Book Chapters)

Kant's Transcendental Idealism and the Problem of Metaphysics

Deadline: June 30, 2018

The focus of the book is on Immanuel Kant's critical philosophy, especially his transcendental idealism concerning the distinction between appearance (phenomenon) and the thing-in-itself (noumenon) in the Critique of Pure Reason (1781, 1787). Does the doctrine make ontological claims or does it merely espouse an epistemic thesis? Does Kant's distinction suggest the existence of two ontological worlds; one phenomenal and the other noumenal, or two aspects of the same thing? Furthermore, what does Kant mean by critical philosophy or metaphysics? We also welcome papers on the broader issues of Kant's critical philosophy, especially those dealing with his methodological refutation of the metaphysical dogmatism of both his predecessors and contemporaries.

We are soliciting for scholarly works from experts in the field of Kant's studies. The paper must be original (not previously published), written in English, and be at least five thousand (5000) words to merit consideration. Our book chapter contributor must have an affiliation with a higher institution of learning; hold a Ph.D (or ABD) in philosophy or related areas. The book will be published in the United States. Submissions will be accepted or declined based on merit.
